College Coaches

Marc Chandonnet, Head Men's and Women's Coach
Seattle University

"Some of the finest players on our teams have actually come from opportunities provided by camps. It definitely gives coaches and players a great opportunity to interact and get to know each other better than regular tournaments. It also gives us an opportunity to share some of the knowledge we have acquired so that the player can enhance and improve their practice."

Danielle Griffiths, Head Women's Coach
Brown University

"Junior golf camps are extremely vital in the process of college recruiting. Golf camps not only give the coaches an opportunity to get to know the junior golfer, but they provide a chance to have fun while sharing the knowledge of the game."

Andrew Larkin, Associate Men's Head Coach
UCLA

"Camps are the best way for coaches to work hands on with players and get to know them on a more personal level. During one on one work at a camps, coaches have a chance to see how each player learns and may be a in a group setting. For younger players, the new NCAA rules have restricted visits and camps are now the best way to interact with players that cannot visit campus."

Chessey Thomas, Assistant Women's Coach
University of Washington

"The opportunity that camps provide both the coaches and players is incredible. To have the chance to work with one another in a setting that closely simulates college golf is invaluable in terms of helping build great relationships, communication and trust."
